Learn how the Captive Insurance industry in the regional and domestic insurance industry are starting to look the same.

What are the implications?

Course Description

The Captive Insurance industry has long been an important part of the economies of Bermuda, Cayman Islands, Barbados, Bahamas, and several Eastern Caribbean islands.

I have been involved with captives since the 1990s and continue to serve, in retirement, as a Director of several primarily Canadian-owned captives in Barbados.

Over the years, the captive industry has generated significant employment—particularly in accounting—along with government revenue from licensing fees and in-country meetings.

In the past decade, however, the structure and operation of captives, especially in Barbados, have evolved. At the same time, so-called “domestic” insurers have expanded their scope across the Caribbean and beyond.

This presentation will examine the gradual convergence of these two sectors—how they operate, are regulated and taxed, and the risks they are licensed to insure.

WILLIAM TOMLIN

William Tomlin is Barbadian and has a BA Hons from McGill and a MBA from University of Western Ontario.

William was a High School Teacher and Barbados National Swim Coach and then cautiously got into the insurance field as a Manager of a small insurance agency . He then set up what became Guardian General in Barbados and a few years later set up CGM Insurance Brokers , which became the largest broker in the Eastern Caribbean. Eventually, he sold CGM Brokers and retired in 2015, but still keeps very involved in insurance.

He has consulted on a number of large property / BI claims for Clients in the region over the last 7 years.

He is a Director of 14 large Captive Insurance Companies domiciled in Barbados . Some of these companies have premium incomes in excess of US$100 million . Due to the growing requirements of ensuring the Captives are doing business in Barbados, each of those Directorships involve many meetings during the year including being member of the specialist committees such as Underwriting, Claims and Finance . A great deal of insurance knowledge has been gained from this involvement.

William has been representing the IAC for the last two years facilitating specialist Webinars.

The focus of his presentations has always been on identifying risk rather than only analysing insurance policies . Understanding risk by both the Insurer and the Insured is the key.
